Dance Camera West always earns high praise for its eclectic programming agenda, presenting dance-related films that allow viewers to experience the broad diversity of the genre. The festival's centerpiece — and the impetus for its creation eight years ago — is the much-anticipated opening weekend at REDCAT, with its focus on contemporary choreographers employing the short-film format to combine dance and cinematography. Stacked with more than 25 film/dance pieces from around the world, the three programs offer an immersion into this visceral hybrid medium.
